In Just Five...Supporting Your Children’s Homework Experiences

Caryn Jung, M.S.
Senior Coordinator

The beginning of school often represents the promise of new learning, enrichment and socialization experiences. These may include changes in homework, ranging from an increased number of subject areas, to expectations regarding a more in-depth command of topics and concepts. Your child’s teacher(s) and other school professionals can offer valuable guidance regarding homework strategies.

For additional assistance, here is a sampling of in-person and online resources student and employee families at The University of Arizona may wish to consider. Descriptions are based upon Web site-provided comments. Also, visit the “News” section of UA Life & Work Connections homepage to view “Readiness Tips for Back to School” or go to the Child Care and Family Resources Articles link.
